Preface

This double major program in Political Science and Journalism and Mass Communication offers a unique opportunity to delve into the intricate relationship between power, information, and society. Designed for students passionate about understanding the political world and its communication landscape, this program equips you with the critical thinking, analytical, and communication skills necessary to navigate the complexities of the 21st century.

In today's rapidly evolving landscape, the line between politics and communication is increasingly blurred. Information technology has revolutionized how political actors communicate with the public, how political campaigns are waged, and how citizens engage with the political process. This program recognizes this interconnectedness and empowers you to understand both sides of the coin.

By studying Political Science, you will gain a comprehensive understanding of political institutions, ideologies, and processes. You will explore the theoretical underpinnings of power, analyze political behavior, and critically examine public policy issues. Simultaneously, Journalism and Mass Communication studies equip you with the knowledge and skills necessary to analyze media ecosystems, understand the impact of different media forms on public discourse, and explore the evolving ethical questions surrounding journalism and communication.

Political Science courses will introduce you to various political systems, theories of power and governance, comparative politics, and international relations. You will gain insights into the historical development of political thought, examine contemporary political challenges, and explore potential solutions. Journalism courses will equip you with a foundational understanding of mass communication theory, the evolution of media platforms, and the critical analysis of media content. You will delve into the ethical considerations of communication, explore the power of media in shaping public opinion, and learn about new media technologies and their impact on society.

The four-year honours format offers several advantages compared to the traditional three-year structure. It allows for a more rigorous exploration of core journalistic principles, media theory, and practical skills. Students will have the opportunity to delve deeper into novel and specialized areas of Political Science and Journalism, Mass Media and Communication. This expanded curriculum fosters a deeper understanding of the complex interplay between media, society, and technology. The multi-disciplinary approach in the programme design will enhance the capabilities of the student to excel in multiple arenas of knowledge. Also, there are a number of course components and course baskets like Discipline Specific Core and Electives (DSC and DSE), Discipline Specific Capstone Courses, Multi-Disciplinary Courses (MDC), Value Added Courses (VAC), Skill Enhancement Courses (SEC), Ability Enhancement Courses (AEC) which are intended to provide diverse aspects of the fields of study.

Furthermore, the honours program emphasizes practical application. Students will gain hands-on experience through a variety of courses, workshops, and internship opportunities. This ensures graduates are well-equipped to enter the dynamic media industry with a strong foundation in both theoretical knowledge and practical skills.

This syllabus document serves as a comprehensive guide to the B.A. (Hons) Political Science with Journalism and Mass Communication double major program. It details the MGU-UGP regulations, program structure, course descriptions, learning outcomes, and assessment methods. We are confident that this program will empower you to become a critical thinker, a skilled communicator, and a responsible media professional. This double major program offers a rich and interdisciplinary curriculum that goes beyond the confines of traditional political science and journalism courses.

Course Name	INTRODUCTION TO INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY RIGHTS
Type of Course	Multi-Disciplinary Course - MDC A
Course Code	MG2MDCPJM100
Course Level	100-199
Course Summary	Intellectual property (IP) rights are the legal rights that protect the creations of the human intellect, such as inventions, literary and artistic works, designs, and symbols. This course is of great importance: it encourages innovation and creativity. By granting exclusive rights to creators, IPRs provide an incentive for people to come up with new ideas and express themselves in new ways. They promote fair competition. IPRs help to level the playing field by preventing others from benefiting from someone else's work without permission. They support economic growth. IPRs are essential for the development and commercialization of new products and services.

Teaching and Learning Approach	Classroom Procedure (Mode of transaction) <ol style="list-style-type: none"> Lectures: The instructor would provide foundational knowledge on the meaning and emergence of human rights, the different generations of human rights, approaches to human rights, challenges faced, and the universal context of human rights. This would include discussing key concepts, historical developments, and contemporary issues. Discussions: Class discussions would be encouraged to explore different perspectives on human rights, analyze case studies, and debate ethical dilemmas. Students might be assigned readings or given prompts to stimulate discussion on topics such as the role of technology in human rights, the effectiveness of international treaties, or the intersectionality of human rights issues. Group Activities: Students could work in small groups to research specific human rights topics, prepare presentations, or develop solutions to hypothetical human rights challenges. This would encourage collaboration, critical thinking, and communication skills. Multimedia Presentations: Videos, documentaries, guest speakers, and other multimedia resources could be used to complement lectures and readings, providing real-life examples and personal testimonies to illustrate human rights issues in different contexts around the world. Assignments: Students may be assigned written essays, research papers, or projects on specific human rights topics to deepen their understanding and develop their analytical and writing skills. Assessment: Assessment methods could include quizzes, exams, participation in discussions, presentation evaluations, and the quality of written assignments.

Course Name	INTRODUCTION TO PHILOSOPHY OF SOCIAL SCIENCE
Type of Course	DSE A
Course Code	MG6DSEPJM300
Course Level	300-399
Course Summary	This course aims to provide students with a comprehensive grasp of foundational concepts and ideas within the realm of philosophy of social science. By delving into major theories and significant debates in the field, the course is organized around fundamental themes such as epistemology, ontology, objectivity, subjectivity, causation, explanation and interpretation, research ethics, and the nature of social entities. The logical progression of these topics facilitates the construction of a cohesive understanding. Through this structured approach, the course cultivates critical thinking and analytical skills that are directly applicable to social research. In addition to theoretical readings in the philosophy of social science, the course incorporates case studies from diverse social sciences to demonstrate how philosophical conceptions are employed in real-world research and social and political analysis. By drawing insights from various disciplines, the course underscores the interdisciplinary nature inherent in the philosophy of social sciences.

Course Name	METHODOLOGY OF RESEARCH IN POLITICAL SCIENCE
Type of Course	DCC A
Course Code	MG7DCCPJM400
Course Level	400-499
Course Summary	The primary goal of this course is to empower participants with the knowledge and skills essential for engaging in systematic, rigorous, and ethical research. By providing exposure to diverse research methodologies, the course aims to equip individuals with a comprehensive skill set necessary for the preparation and execution of research endeavours. The ultimate objective is to prepare participants for advanced academic pursuits, ensuring they are proficient in contributing meaningfully to their respective fields through well-informed and impactful research practice

Course Name	MEDIA AND POLITICS IN THE CONTEMPORARY
Type of Course	DCE B
Course Code	MG7DCEPJM405
Course Level	400 - 499
Course Summary	The course offers critical perspectives regarding expansion of media forms and its political ramifications in India. Majoritarian tendencies and populist turn in democracies across the globe is examined through the lens of the media. New media forms have emerged as critical agents of major dimensions of popular politics such as electioneering, governance and expression of dissent. Institutions of parliamentary democracy and functioning of judiciary are impacted by the paradox of authoritarian populism. Critical awareness of how media forms shape popular politics and citizenship is an imperative for learners across disciplines.

Course Level	400-499
Course Summary	This course is designed to delve into the historical and contemporary manifestations of organized violence within the global society. Drawing upon political and sociological theories, the curriculum aims to elucidate the causes and dynamics underlying acts of violence. Through analysis, the course seeks to understand the roles played by both state and non-state actors in perpetuating organized violence across different historical periods and in the present. Additionally, the course explores various theories and strategies related to conflict resolution, peacekeeping, post-conflict reconstruction, and reconciliation. Ethical considerations surrounding violence, as well as the impact of media and propaganda on shaping perceptions of organized violence in diverse contexts, are critically examined. The application of theoretical frameworks to specific case studies forms an integral part of the course, enabling students to derive Practicum insights into the intricate politics of organized violence.

Programme	BA (Hons) Political Science with Journalism and Mass Communication (Double Major)
Course Name	MEDIA, MARGINALITY AND SITES OF RESISTANCE
Type of Course	DCE B
Course Code	MG8DCEPJM404
Course Level	400
Course Summary	The course offers a critical look on how mainstream media simultaneously challenges and entrenches structures of oppression like class, caste, gender and religious orthodoxy. From analysing media coverage of economic deprivation and caste and gender questions to throwing light on how oppressed social groups leverage media technologies in their socio-political struggles, the course covers key themes, debates and issues related to media and marginality in India. A keen understanding of how contestations around structures of privilege and disadvantage play out in the site of media is imperative for a public-spirited media professional.
